DOLS. CTS. DATE BILLS PAYABLE—FEBRUARY or point Paris, Wed. Dec. 31, 1919 10.35 P.M. Have just been reading old diaries particularly the 1913 or "Flats" Jone, I also have new year's Eave for 1916 and '17. I hey being rather interesting I have decided to make a few comments suitable to the time and hour and so pause at this stage of the game for a little retrospection and possibly a vague glance into the future. as for retrospection why go back forther than this afternoon? The most beautiful thought that comes to my mind is that wonderful sunset. That RECEIVABLE most glorious byet soft and peaceful picture! But I might as weary hours of "organic"; I donned my coal for and view brown muffler and went out into the fresh air. I turned up to the subulay and mounted the J.T.R. tracks, crossed the bridge and proceeded leisurely along the embankment. all the time a admired the pretty town, and the country far and wille, taking special note of the progen winder out of sight and ito wooded franks as for as the eye could see over which rosettle rough farm lands the picturesque seat of my summer's work

DOLS. CTS. DATE BILLS PAYABLE-MARCH My attention thus taken, I soon found myself on the straight sieve of track leading to the Brantford hill in the distance. What afr unofestrusted view of the misty red sun as it sank neaver the crest of those old familian hills. The scene was exquisite, not a breath of air stirring; not very cold; just & Largo enough to peop the little fall of snow. Wandering on Spinddenly realized that I was at the little putwas over dould's have where I had out for a few moments last fall. as it was a little cold for that past time I walked pride briskly down the lane. But alles! pride goeth before RECEIVABLE a fall. Wathout the least warning my heels shot outon some hidden line, I padended to gather myself to-gether, placing the parts so in a chindre suggles I was soon down to the "LEN" along which I haved my step for home. I assing so vear, I could bye to my heart's content the old homestead which had become as familiar last summer. The short winter day began to tade, as approached the town, with a wide esyponde of hills, and overhead the faint grey clockdo lay perbled across the sky. In the west the glories senset was doing.

237th MacLean Highlanders of New Brunswick and arrived in France in 1917, serving until the end of the war.

In April, 1919, he married Miss Helen Winnifred Mackenzie at Lakefield, where he had attended Lakefield Preparatory School as a boy. After farming for several years in that district, which his father had made famous in many poems, he joined the staff of the Toronto Star in 1927.

His early writings were marked by clever and brilliant whimsy which gave him a wide popularity. His works, published in recent years in Maclean's, Liberty, Esquire and other magazines were of a more serious nature and highly acclaimed.
